We released another site built on XOOPS -- for a non-profit that enables young people to do better at school -- mainly focused on Austin, TX, school district: The Austin Project. They had a home-built content management system that was very old and clunky. We started/finished this project about 18 months ago, and the group finally got the content going, so it's using an older version of XOOPS than I would setup these days, but it's a XOOPS site and works well.
